Lighten Up Your Life (Photoshop)

Tip of the Week by Jen White on February 15, 2010

Regardless of how nice your camera is, a little fix in Photoshop is like a cold glass of lemonade on a hot summer day.

In fact, I rarely let a photo of mine go to print without first being edited in Photoshop.

In this tutorial, I will be showing you how a few simple steps can take your photo from so-so to sensational.

- * Open a photo that you think turned out too dark.
- * At first glance this photo looks good to me. It's got nice clarity and would make an excellent addition to a scrapbook page. But it's just a little dark. I would like to see more details in her face, because she's so sweet!!

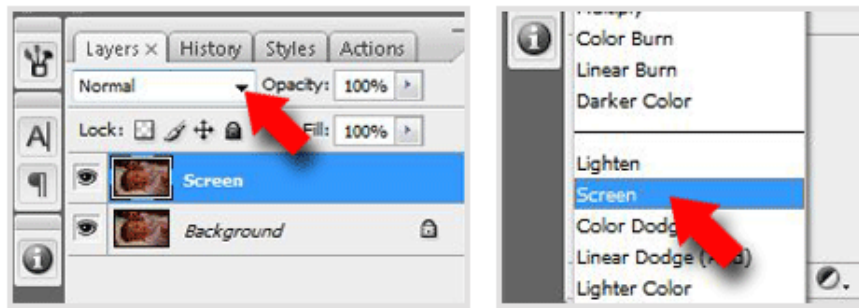

Step 2) Create a Duplicate Layer

- * In the Menu bar choose Layer > Duplicate Layer.
- * Name the layer "Screen".
- * Click OK.

Step 3) Set the Blending Mode

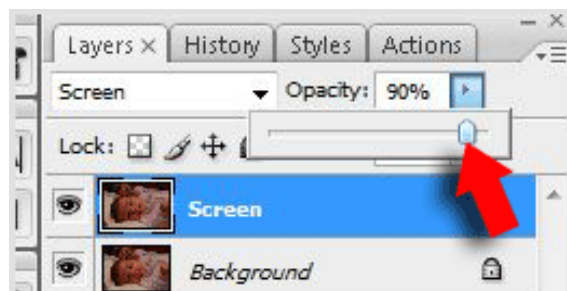

- * Make sure the "Screen" layer is the active layer.

* Click the drop-down menu at the top of the Layers panel and change the blending mode to Screen.

Step 4) Adjustments (if necessary)

- * Is your photo too light? Then reduce the opacity of the Screen layer. To do this...
 - o Make sure the “Screen” layer is the active layer.
 - o In the Layers panel, move the Opacity slider to the left until you are satisfied with the results.

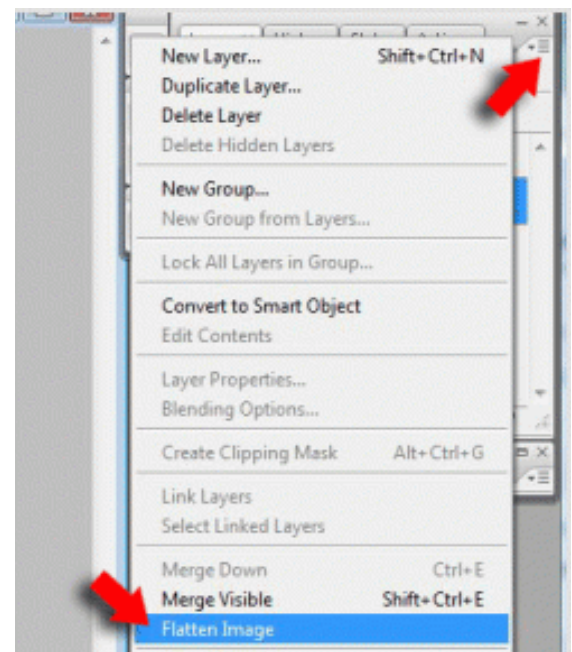

- * Is your photo still too dark? Then duplicate the Screen layer to lighten it even more. To do this...
 - o Make sure the “Screen” layer is the active layer.
 - o Duplicate the screen layer again by choosing Layer > Duplicate Layer.
 - o The new layer should already be in the Screen mode.
 - o Adjust the Opacity slider or repeat as necessary.

Every photo will be different, you just have to go with what looks good to you. When you are satisfied with your photo, proceed to Step 5.

Step 5) Flatten Your Photo

- * Click on the fly-out menu in the Layers panel.
- * Click Flatten Image.

If you'd like to permanently save these changes to your photo, save it as a .jpeg image with an altered name, so you don't save over the original image.

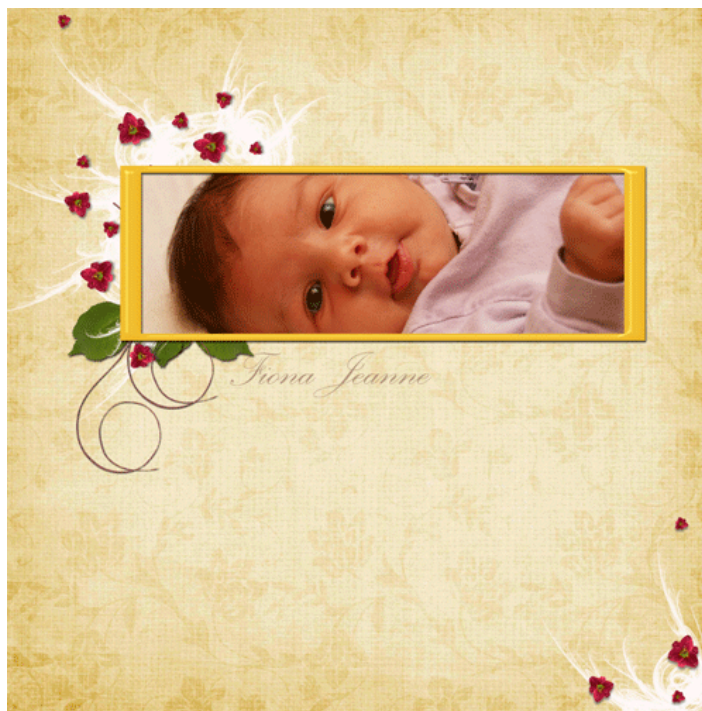

Before

After

Now you can drag your sensational photo to your scrapbook page!
